Kids Being Kings

by Ted A. Trainor

“Happy hearts and happy faces,
Happy play in grassy places—
That was how in ancient ages,
Children grew to kings and sages.”

~From “Good and Bad Kids” by Robert Louis Stevenson

One year ago, the centerpiece of our backyard makeover in Atlanta was a mound of Georgia red clay. To my children, however, the dirt pile was a world to conquer, a natural slide, an alpine adventure, a tower to climb, and a precipice from which to jump. From atop Knox’s Knoll (named after the littlest Trainor), they launched pinecones, rocks, dirt, sticks, and each other.

I was amazed as I watched my children dig, build, bury, and play with the clay for hours—for days even! With their imaginations ignited by dirt, my children had endless activities, and these activities were (and are!) critical to their physical development. Think of the gross motor skill exercise that occurs in the above activities. Underneath those red clay stained clothes, muscles were strengthening, their limbs and joints adjusted dexterously to accommodate the varying slopes of the descent, and their knees and quadriceps became accustomed to that strange buckling sensation of “going down” a hill.

While I worried at the thought of my risk-taking third child riding a bike down the steepest side of the hill, I rejoiced in watching him learn to shift his weight, balance, turn and bounce. Whereas I cringed as he flew over the handlebars and as his mouth inched ever closer to “eating dirt,” I exhaled a sigh of relief that he was strong enough to withstand a fall.

Our children, I believe, are not merely “kids being kids,” as the mantra goes. Something more profound is happening to children as they play. In fact, Christian parents ought to see these backyard adventures more as “kids being kings.” These everyday activities in the backyard are component parts of what it means to be human, let alone a microcosm of what it means to be image-bearers of God. God says, “Fill the earth and subdue it; have dominion over the fish of the sea, over the birds of the air, and over every living thing that moves on the earth” (Genesis 1:28).

The first man began fulfilling God’s commands (Gen. 1:28 is often called the “cultural mandate”) in a garden while modern man begins, in a sense, in the backyard. Children were made to traverse hills, collect bugs, extract worms from the mud, and catch fireflies. Outdoor play is simply the beginning of a child's maturation in fulfilling this cultural mandate. Stephen Perks illustrates this concept so adeptly in his work, A Christian Philosophy of Education Explained: "This process of education, of learning and growth in the understanding of God's creation and man's part in it, is essential to man's stewardship of the earth and to his calling to have dominion over it. It is not something that stands on its own, an end in itself. It has a purpose. That purpose is to train man into his calling under God and is thus fulfilled only as he exercises that calling. Education is the means of preparing man for his God-given task of subduing and replenishing the earth as God's image-bearer" (88).

Thus, let us purpose to nurture our children in such a manner that playing in the backyard becomes "kids" training for "kingship." We have a calling to assist them in maturing in such a way so as to serve nobly and righteously the King of Kings in all that we do—whether it be strengthening our bodies by taking dominion of a dirt pile or by sharpening our minds and character through diligently completing our homework assignments. "And whatever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through Him" (Col. 3:17). Amen.

Ted and Kathryn Trainor, and their four children, have relocated from Atlanta to the rolling hills and turkey populated fields of middle Tennessee.

Ted is now the headmaster at Providence Christian Academy, a joyful school expecting over 230 students and a ninth grade in 2006-2007 in Murfreesboro, Tennessee.

He and Kathryn are currently contemplating the next backyard makeover. Anxiously awaiting the arrival of the next pile of dirt, their four children are sharpening their kickball skills for now, and three of the four attend Providence Christian Academy.

ACCS Norms for CTP 4 Available in Spring '07

Dr. Sid Barish, VP of the Educational Records Bureau (ERB), is pleased to announce that an Association Norm (AN) will be available to ACCS as one of the spring 2007 norm-group choices. Schools that are currently ACCS members and ERB members will have this option among their norm-group choices. Those schools may choose to compare their students' achievement on the CTP 4 with the combined group of students attending ACCS schools and taking the test at the same time of year (spring or fall). Contact the ERB for more information.

RenWeb Discount Offered to ACCS Members

RenWeb School Management Software is pleased to announce that all ACCS members purchasing the totally web-based program will receive a 10% Association discount. This discount applies to the program license fee and is effective immediately. ACCS is the first Christian school association to be granted a member discount by RenWeb.

RenWeb management software has become the industry leader in integrated web-based software connecting school administration, the classroom and the home. School personnel can access their data and work from home, while on the road, or anywhere in the world via internet. Recent parent examples are an Army officer serving in Afghanistan and missionaries in Spain thanking their stateside Christian school (and RenWeb) for enabling them to track their children's grades and school activities via the web.

RenWeb serves schools from 50 to nearly 5000 students with the same quality program. Security is unmatched and RenWeb converts your school's data and actually sets up your school's database the first year according to your requirements at no extra charge. The entire program comes with a risk-free, six-month money back guarantee. For general information about the program, references, and testimonials, visit: www.renweb.com. To receive a free demonstration, contact Paul F. Baker (Office 561-447-7280, Mobile 561-702-0921, pfbaker@bellsouth.net).

Book Review

Many are familiar with the well-used quote by George Bernard Shaw: “Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.” But what if the problem isn’t a failure of personal memory, but rather a lack of information? Of course, some things seem just too difficult or painful for us to want to dig into. However, Jesus also made a statement that has some bearing on the matter, “And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:32). In the context, Christ was referring to those Jews who continued in His word, and in so doing, proved to be His disciples. Yet, I believe the application of Jesus’ words is broader than the immediate context. It is important for Christians to be truth-seekers.

By faith, we reign with Christ; we are fellow kings with Christ. The author of Proverbs, himself a king, taught, “It is the glory of God to conceal a thing; but the honour of kings is to search out a matter” (Proverbs 25:2). It is to our credit to seek out the truth, no matter how thorny or agonizing. Some aspects of history can be much the same, and John Dwyer’s book presents just such a morally and intellectually troubling but significant topic.

What a person calls something often gives away their biases, and no man alive is without bias. Yet regardless of an individual’s personal persuasions about who was right and who was wrong in the Civil War or the War Between the States, John Dwyer’s The War Between the States is an in-depth presentation of the complex and problematical issues which led up to and caused the war, and the subsequent restoration of the defeated states to the Union. He provides an abundance of quotes from key figures from both the North and the South, and in some instances, even from abroad, on all aspects of the war. He not only manifests the wickedness of the South towards blacks in the institution of slavery, but also the common and less well-known harshness towards blacks in the North. A case in point: how many slave-states fought for the North? When were the slaves in these states emancipated?

Dwyer also provides some valuable insight into the effect of the war on the spread of the gospel, both in the North and the South. Whereas this is a positive consequence of the war, one is still overwhelmed and almost numbed by the breadth of human wickedness that was also prevalent on both sides throughout the war. The book also contains numerous paintings, prints and photographs of many key figures and scenes, all of which are accompanied with ample historical documentation to help the reader appreciate the significance these people or places played at particular points in the tragic drama.

Between 600,000 to 700,000 men lost their lives as a result of this war. This fact alone should move us to know what was of such importance that both sides would be willing to make such phenomenal sacrifices in human lives. A related question: how many women, children, elderly and infirm died as a result of General Sherman’s march through Atlanta to the sea? Was such an action biblically supportable?

This book is historically thorough and captivantly written. Roger D. McGrath, Ph.D., was a former professor of history at UCLA for 15 years, before teaching at Pepperdine, and ultimately California State University-Northridge. He is the author of several historical books and articles, and has been a frequent history expert on several television documentaries. Dr. McGrath made the following comment about this book, “The War Between The States by John J. Dwyer, et al., is the best textbook for the high school, preparatory academy, or junior college I’ve ever read. Moreover, it covers far more than its title suggests.” (For the complete review by Dr. McGrath, visit the ACCS website at www.accsedu.org > CLASSIS 2006).

Many American Christians may wonder, how did this nation of ours ever get to be like it is today? Without understanding what preceded our contemporary situation, it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to adequately answer this question. Reading John Dwyer’s The War Be- tween the States provides an abundance of information that most of us have never been made adequately aware of. Reading this book was so intensely captivating that it was difficult to put it down. Indeed, I found that it was the first thing I grabbed in the morning when I awoke, and the last thing I set down before falling asleep at night. John Dwyer has done all Americans a great service by shining a bright light on this dark, disturbing, and maybe even suppressed portion of our nation’s history. Reading this book can be a sobering experience, but nonetheless a very worthwhile and beneficial one. “And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.”

The War Between the States: America’s Uncivil War is available through Bluebonnet Press, P.O. Box 51661, Denton, Texas, 76206; phone (214) 538-3863; or via their website at www.bluebonnetpress.com.
